Autobiographical Passages Of An Old Novel; By The Rev. Richard Graves. 54-1 Mr. Rivers And Charlotte Woodville. Chapter XI. WILLIAM SHENSTONE. 51. --Letters, 1739-1743. Pains Of Leisure. IT has always appeared to me difficult to account for Grays disparaging estimate of the character of Shenstone as derived from the perusal of his Letters. I also have read, too, an octavo volume of Shenstones Letters. Regarding them as a whole, and in comparing one passage with another, as written under various moods, and at different periods of his life, from 1739 to 1763, I do not find that--1. He was always wishing for money, for fame, and other distinctions. 2. I do not consider that his whole philosophy consisted in living against his will in retirement. 3. I do not..
